STATE OF THE CANNABIS ECONOMY
AN INSIDE LOOK
INTRODUCTION

During the Covid-19 pandemic cannabis was labeled an “essential good,” giving cannabis businesses the false sense of security during times of recession. Under this assumption, cannabis businesses doubled-down on their spending and increased headcount.

However, now we are seeing that cannabis isn’t recession-proof, and regardless of experience, cannabis professionals are having to learn how to navigate their businesses through uncharted waters in real time.

You can see the effects of this through the mass layoffs that continue to happen every day, including at some of the biggest names in the industry, as well as through plummeting wholesale prices, poor SEC filings and rock-bottom fund returns. It seems these days as if nobody is safe.

However, while cannabis remains in hot water, the debate over whether or not we’re already in a recession is still highly debated, as most indicators and many experts point to some sort of downturn at the very least in our near future.

The cannabis industry has proven itself resilient from Day 1 of legalization; and the challenge the sector now faces is a true stress test, with businesses having to get creative with their business strategies as they navigate these uncertain times.

There’s never been a better time to check the pulse of business leaders in the cannabis space.

And that’s exactly what we did in our 2022 Cannabis Industry Salary Guide survey that closed in September. We asked business leaders to forecast their sales, capital spending, and hiring over the next 12 months. We then asked them to tell us how they feel about the current state of the national economy and that of the cannabis economy.

In this white paper, we analyze those results, contrasting them with the sentiment of business leaders in the “traditional” business space. We also offer key, actionable insights that will help guide any cannabis company to success in this, yes, unprecedented climate.
AN OPTIMISTIC INDUSTRY

A majority of cannabis leaders who responded to our 2022 Vangst Cannabis Industry Salary Guide survey are bullish about their own companies’ prospects in 2023. And we’re not talking small majorities. By large margins, cannabis leaders told us that they expect sales, capital spending, and hiring to increase over the next 12 months.

HOW DO YOU EXPECT YOUR COMPANY’S SALES TO CHANGE IN THE NEXT YEAR?
- Increase: 69.4%
- Decrease: 8.8%
- Not sure: 10.9%
- No change: 8.2%
- Prefer not to answer: 2.7%

HOW DO YOU EXPECT YOUR COMPANY’S OVERALL U.S. EMPLOYMENT TO CHANGE IN THE NEXT YEAR?
- Increase: 67.3%
- Decrease: 6.8%
- Not sure: 4.8%
- No change: 19%
- Prefer not to answer: 2%

HOW DO YOU EXPECT YOUR COMPANY’S U.S. CAPITAL SPENDING TO CHANGE IN THE NEXT YEAR?
- Increase: 58.5%
- Decrease: 8.8%
- Not sure: 11.6%
- No change: 16.3%
- Prefer not to answer: 4.8%

SOURCE: Vangst 2022 Cannabis Industry Salary Guide survey data (not yet released)
A CANNABIS CONTRADICTION

Those same leaders, however, are bearish on the overall U.S. economy, as well as the overall cannabis economy. A large majority of respondents told us that U.S. economic conditions are worse than they were a year ago, and an even larger majority said that economic conditions in cannabis are worse than they were a year ago.

WHAT IS YOUR OVERALL VIEW OF THE U.S. ECONOMY?

- Economic conditions are worse than they were a year ago: 73.1%
- Economic conditions are better than they were a year ago: 8.3%
- Not sure: 10.3%
- Prefer not to answer: 8.3%

WHAT IS YOUR OVERALL VIEW OF THE CANNABIS ECONOMY?

- Economic conditions are worse than they were a year ago: 76.2%
- Economic conditions are better than they were a year ago: 12.9%
- Not sure: 5.4%
- Prefer not to answer: 5.4%

SOURCE: Vangst 2022 Cannabis Industry Salary Guide survey data (not yet released)
MAINSTREAM COMPARISON

Business Roundtable, an association of CEOs who lead some of the biggest companies in the U.S., has been surveying its members since 2002 to produce its quarterly CEO Economic Outlook Index. The most recent report, compiled from August 12 through September 7, and released in September 2022, provides a point of comparison to the data Vangst collected from August 10 through September 21. The major difference here is that Business Roundtable members were asked to look out six months, while we asked cannabis executives to think a full year ahead.

As you can see, CEOs of more “traditional” businesses are much less optimistic about their own companies’ prospects.

HOW DO YOU EXPECT YOUR COMPANY’S SALES TO CHANGE IN THE NEXT SIX MONTHS?
- Increase: 65%
- No change: 19%
- Decrease: 16%

HOW DO YOU EXPECT YOUR COMPANY’S U.S. CAPITAL SPENDING TO CHANGE IN THE NEXT SIX MONTHS?
- Increase: 43%
- No change: 39%
- Decrease: 18%

HOW DO YOU EXPECT YOUR COMPANY’S U.S. EMPLOYMENT TO CHANGE IN THE NEXT SIX MONTHS?
- Increase: 47%
- No change: 34%
- Decrease: 19%

SOURCE: Business Roundtable
SIMILAR CHALLENGES

Despite the different economic outlooks — and unique challenges that face cannabis (like U.S. Tax Code 280E) — the sector shares similar challenges to mainstream business, according to Vangst survey data and J.P.Morgan Chase’s midyear 2022 Business Leaders Outlook Pulse Survey, which was released in June 2022. Inflation, labor, and an uncertain economy are all major concerns for many leaders across sectors.

WHAT ARE THE TOP CHALLENGES FACING CANNABIS ORGANIZATIONS?

- Regulations & Compliance: 52.4%
- Inflation: 50.3%
- Federal Prohibition: 49.7%
- Domestic Economic Conditions: 44.2%
- Domestic Competition: 42.2%
- Availability of Skilled Workers: 33.3%
- U.S. Politics: 21.8%
- Prefer Not to Answer: 3.4%
- Not Sure: 1.4%

SOURCE: Vangst 2022 Cannabis Industry Salary Guide survey data (not yet released)

WHAT ARE THE TOP CHALLENGES FACING ORGANIZATIONS OUTSIDE OF CANNABIS?

- Labor Shortage: 70%
- Ongoing Supply Chain Issues: 47%
- Inflation: 40%
- Uncertain Economic Conditions: 22%
- Revenue/Sales Growth: 12%

SOURCE: J.P.Morgan Chase 2022 Business Leaders Outlook Pulse Survey
REASON FOR OPTIMISM

There’s a likely explanation for the disparity between cannabis optimism and mainstream pessimism: Adversity is nothing new to the cannabis industry. Since the first day of legal, regulated cannabis sales, the industry has faced challenges unlike any other. From compliance to banking and taxes, there is no other industry that is so frequently forced to “make lemons into lemonade” when it comes to operations.

But if cannabis layoffs, stock prices, and fund returns show us anything, it’s that cannabis is not immune to larger macroeconomic conditions.

Vangst Founder and CEO Karson Humiston recently laid out her thoughts on the cannabis sector and any coming recession.

● Cannabis already went through a “canna-cession” in 2019. The best cannabis businesses quickly cut fat, focused deeply on fundamentals and are thriving today. The worst cannabis companies died.

● Due to federal regulations, access to capital has always been tough for cannabis businesses. Since most companies have never had the luxury of unlimited capital, cannabis has always been a scrappy industry — one that has been primed to be more prepared than any other industry should we enter a recession.

● Any coming recession is just another reminder that cannabis leaders should be building profitable businesses that are not reliant on endless rounds of funding.

● The cannabis industry has massive tailwinds — another advantage that other sectors don’t have. New states are opening up legal cannabis programs every year, more consumers are entering the market, and legislation has positive momentum.
KEY TAKEAWAYS

CANNABIS LEADERS ARE BULLISH ON THE FUTURE OF THEIR BUSINESSES
Large majorities of the executives who responded to the 2022 Vangst Cannabis Industry Salary Guide survey believe that their sales, capital expenditures, and hiring will increase in the coming year.

THOSE SAME LEADERS ARE BEARISH ON THE OVERALL ECONOMY
Most executives who responded to our survey say overall U.S. economic conditions are worse than they were a year ago. Even more say that, overall, economic conditions are worse in the cannabis industry than they were a year ago.

LEADERS OF MORE “TRADITIONAL” BUSINESSES TAKE A DIMMER VIEW
Fewer than half of Business Roundtable members see their capital spending or hiring to grow in the next six months (compared to nearly 70% at surveyed cannabis companies). Only 65% think their sales will increase (compared to 69% of cannabis leaders).

CANNABIS & TRADITIONAL COMPANIES FACE SIMILAR CHALLENGES
While cannabis companies face troubles a mainstream business could never imagine — like 80% effective tax rates thanks to U.S. Tax Code 280E — inflation, labor, and an uncertain national economy are all big worries for business leaders, no matter their industry.

THIS ISN’T OUR FIRST RODEO
The cannabis industry has been through this before; and it came out stronger than it was when it entered. The unique challenges plant-touching and ancillary companies face have better prepared this sector for an economic downturn than probably any other.

KNOW YOUR WORKFORCE
Vangst regularly releases insights and analyses so that you can better understand the fast-moving cannabis landscape. Our Cannabis Industry Salary Guide is widely recognized as the authority on industry pay trends. Our 2022 Guide with an expanded focus on ancillary roles will be released in January. To take a deeper dive today, click here to download the 2021 guide.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Thank you to our employees, partners, friends, survey participants, Business Roundtable, J.P.Morgan Trust, and all of the professionals and companies that make us Proud to Work in Cannabis.

COPYRIGHT
This report’s copyright is owned by Vangst. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, distributed, or transmitted in any form or by any means, including photocopying, recording, or other electronic or mechanical methods, without the prior written permission of the publisher, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical reviews and certain other non-commercial uses permitted by copyright law. For permission requests, contact the publisher at hello@vangst.com.